

[Cut to: The Brother, Farid's apartment. He is setting down some drinks for Bones and Booth.]

Farid: Yes, I am a Christian.

Booth: And Hamid is Muslim and Sahar?

Farid: I converted. Hamid could never accept it. Religious differences caused too many problems.

Bones: Seems to be a consistent fact throughout history.

Farid: Please. (Gestures to Booth to sit down) I tried to make peace with my brother but it was difficult. There was more than religion between us.

Booth: Sahar mentioned that there was some...uh... family problems?

Farid: Yes.

Booth: I can understand how delicate it can be.

Farid: Did she tell you anymore than that?

Booth: No but if you have any other information that could help us in the investigation?

Farid: It's not my place.

Booth: We're just trying to find out who killed your brother.

Farid: Sahar was seeing another man but I can't believe she would hurt my brother.

Bones: Do you know who this other man is or is it just a feeling you have?

Farid: I've met him. Ali Ladjavardi. He worked with Hamid at the friendship league. I wanted Hamid to confront Ladjavardi.

Bones: Did both you and Hamid have contact with Ladjavardi?

Farid: Yes, once. Amir, my brother brought me to meet him. Sharing a meal is a gesture of peace. I was trying to save their marriage but Sahar and Ladjavardi were not going to stop their affair so I told Hamid to repudiate her.

Booth: Sorry?

Bones: In Muslim law it's a method of divorce. It's called Talak.

Farid: I still respected his traditions.

Bones: You and your brother seem to share a medical condition.

Farid: Uh, yes. Why is that important?

Booth: We don't mean to embarrass you but Dr. Brennan is just trying to figure out the condition. That's routine. Part of the investigation.

Bones: Have you seen a doctor?

Farid: Yes. He believes it's a genetic disorder we shared. He was going to call Hamid physician to discuss it.

Bones: Would you mind if we saw your medical records?

Farid: Of course not. Da. If I could be helped, I welcome it.
